From Nuremberg To Guantanamo

How do doctors in wartime insulate themselves from their moral and professional consciences?

“Nancy Sherman reminds us on the 60th anniversary of the Nuremberg verdicts that we have not yet made the Nuremberg principles our own.”
—Michael Walzer, Institute for Advanced Study

Nancy Sherman is University Professor of Philosophy at Georgetown University and Adjunct Professor of Law at the Georgetown Law School. From 1997 to 1999, she served as the inaugural holder of the Distinguished Chair in Ethics at the United States Naval Academy. She is the author of Stoic Warriors: The Ancient Philosophy Behind the Military Mind; Making A Necessity of Virtue: Aristotle and Kant on Virtue; and The Fabric of Character: Aristotle’s Theory of Virtue. She is also the editor of Critical Essays on the Classics: Aristotle’s Ethics. Her current project focuses on the moral psychology of soldiering. She has written more than 30 published articles in scholarly journals and is the recipient of numerous awards.

For more information, visit www.dukeethics.org or call 919-660-3033.